End-of-Life Care: Sorgende Kulturen im Austausch

End of Life Care: Caring Communities and Cultures in Exchange

In a 'Caring Community', the family and the neighbors alternating take care of the sick. The elderly from the ethnic or religious community also contribute their wisdom. They all pass on their experience in accompanying and caring for the dying to the next generation.

The events want to create places and spaces in which we can learn from one another.

Here we encourage people from different cultures, different beliefs and various forms of living to talk about, 'How they deal with the elderly, with illness and disease in life, dying and death.

Together we collect our empirical knowledge and report on biographical events, our family systems and forms of living, a story of emigration, flight or persecution.

Conversations of unexpected happiness, love stimulate the encounter so that trust and a shared responsibility for a good coexistence to the end can grow.

Join us and build bridges of a deeper understanding!
